Gruber will be expected to create an overall approach to the digital coverage. Gruber served as editor for The Financial Times from 2005 - 2007 and was appointed editor-in-chief in 2008.. Gruber's time at The New York Times was spent following the financial meltdown — and writing about it. He wrote about financial risks, from risk trading to subprime mortgage lending to the "new world order" where financial markets no longer trust consumers — and what the results of those decisions mean for the U.S. and those on Wall Street. He's written extensively about the potential for mobile and social media to transform the public conversation about money, media and technology..
