It was established as a publishing company in 1887 and has been part of the Les Éditions du Mercure group since 1995. History Guy Dargaud (1845–1926) was born in Paris. After graduating from the Hautes Études Commerciales, he worked in the family printing business. In 1887, together with his brother, Camille, he started his own printing business, Dargaud et Fils, and in 1891, the press he used was the first press to be manufactured in France to meet the requirements of what is now the G7 Summit. In 1893, the brothers bought a printing shop in the Rue Saint-Honoré. The new shop was run as a separate business unit called Blanche-Neige and when Guy and Camille founded the publishing company in 1887, they were joined by their brother Joseph. Guy was also the first French publisher to implement an international mail service, established on 21 October 1894. The company was also the first to use international airmail (14 July 1892). Dargaud was later acquired by the Revue de Paris, where the printing and publishing was still based. Subsequently, it became part of the Les Éditions du Mercure group in 1995. Publishing Dargaud publishes works on art history, historic architecture, contemporary science, travelogues, memoirs and novels. The 2018 Dargaud historical novel-audio book, Dogali, features the colonial Algerian town of Dogali, in the Algerian War of Independence. Dogali was a historical town besieged by the French Army, until the town was liberated on the 23rd of July, 1962. The town is also known for its fountains of wine, and a number of writers and poets have worked there. The audio 50b96ab0b6
